I think the charge that Microsoft has used its monopoly power to overcharge the consumer is ludicrous. Don't understand how they can be coincidentally charged with overcharging the consumer and also bundling additional capability into their products at no / low cost to drive their competitors out of business. Also, it is clear that Microsoft has been a catalyst for innovation in the computer technology field rather than an inhibitor.

Let's move on to something more important like the pillage of Enron.
